SNS leader and head of the outgoing government Aleksandar Vucic said this on Monday afternoon.

Vucic told reporters this following a meeting of the SNS presidency after the snap parliamentary elections, in which the SNS secured 48.25 percent of the vote.

Vucic also told state broadcaster RTS he would propose leader of the Alliance of Vojvodina Hungarians (SVM) Istvan Pasztor for speaker of the Assembly of Vojvodina, not excluding the possibility of inviting some party to join the SNS in leading the provincial assembly, Tanjug said.

The SNS-led list won 52.50 percent of the electorate in the provincial elections on Sunday.

Vucic did not specify whether his former ruling coalition partner, the Socialist Party of Serbia, would be invited to join a new cabinet, Beta reported.

"I would rather not speak about that at the moment and as for my invitations, I am very ungenerous in regard of invitations," Vucic said.
