PM Aleksandar Vucic says that if he wins the April 2 presidential election, the decision on the new PM would be made "in April or May."

"The deadline for the new president to take office is still far away, but if the Serb Progressive Party wins the presidential elections, the decision will be made in April or May," Vucic told TV Prva late on Wednesday, according to Tanjug.

Speaking about his possible replacement at the helm of the government, Vucic said this person would "certainly be diligent and hard working" and also capable of understanding economic experts such as Dragan Djuricin and Pavle Petrovic - "capable of understanding that kind of criticism."
