Officials say the three countries should take in their fair share of migrants.

It is part of a relocation deal agreed two years ago at the height of the migrant crisis.

We are today referring Hungary, the Czech Rep and Poland to the court, as they have given no indication even after the recent opinion issued last summer that they will respect the

The ECJ case will deepen tensions between the three countries and the European Commission.

The Commission is also taking action against Hungary over a new law aimed at tightening restrictions on universities and NGOs.

We will put forward all our possible arguments during the procedure at the EU court and we hope for a positive decision on our side, said Péter Szijjártó, Hungary's foreign minister.

The ECJ rejected a Hungarian challenge to the migrant quotas back in September.
