EuroNews (12 December 2017)

Making good the divorce deal □ and fast. As EU parliament members met in Strasbourg, moves were being made towards getting last weeks Brexit breakthrough agreement legally binding.

It paves the way for a second round of talks, on future trade and a two-year transition period when the UK says au revoir in 2019.

A kind of transitional period will be linked to the progress on the second phase, if we have progress we can talk about the transitional period. If not, there will be no transitional period, said Manfred Weber, German MEP from the European Peoples Party.

EU leaders are due to bless the next talks at a summit this week, after terms were struck on key issues, including citizens rights.

There is a few loose ends especially on citizens rights, which we intend to be tied up in the final agreement, Belgian Green MEP Philippe Lamberts told Euronews.

The Brexit breakthrough last week couldnt come soon enough for British Prime Minister Theresa May. Its not only crucial for her own future, but also helps to allay fears of a disorderly departure from the EU.
