Armenia's President-elect Armenia Sargsyan was hosted on Wednesday at London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE) to present the country's economic opportunities and specifics of the transition to the parliamentary model of government in Armenia, the press service of the President-Elect reported.

The meeting took place in the scope of the President-Elect's foreign tour and addressed also the prospects for implementing joint education projects in Armenia.

Sargsyan also had a separate meeting with LSE Professor Mervyn Allister King, who served as the Governor of the Bank of England from 2003 to 2013. The parties exchanged views on improving the business environment and creating favorable conditions for investment in Armenia.
