A snap parliamentary election will be held in Armenia even if the formerly ruling Republican Party of Armenia (RPA) is against it, Armenian Deputy Prime Minister Tigran Avinyan said Sunday, cited by Sputnik.

"Our people is getting ready to hold a snap election, and it will take place despite the RPA wishes," Avinyan told journalists.

The deputy prime minister added that there were constitutional mechanisms allowing to dissolve the current parliament.

Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan has repeatedly stressed that the snap election should be held as soon as possible.
