KIRKUK - Iraq is taking significant steps to exploit latent oil production in Kirkuk, which has been shut in because of infrastructure constraints and political disputes.

The Bai Hassan oil field is now partially back online, and the state-run North Oil Company (NOC) is producing between 210,000 and 230,000 barrels per day (bpd), according to two NOC officials - by far the company's highest production rate in more than four years.
