The Việt Nam-Singapore Cooperation Centre was officially launched in Hà Nội on Saturday.

Singapores Deputy Prime Minister and Coordinating Minister for National Security, Teo Chee Hean who is in Việt Nam for a six-day visit was present at the event.

Its aim is to help narrow the development gap of the newer ASEAN member states, namely Cambodia, Laos, Myanmar and Việt Nam (CLMV).

The centre was established as part of the Việt Nam – Singapore Training Centre which opened in 2002 under the Initiative for ASEAN Integration (IAI) launched in 2000 by then-Prime Minister Mr Goh Chok Tong.

Since 2002, more than 10,000 Vietnamese officials have attended courses at the centre ranging from language and communication skills, economic development, trade and tourism, public administration, governance and law and infocomm Technology.

At the 51st ASEAN Foreign Ministers Meeting in August 2018, Prime Minister Lee Hsien Loong announced the upgrading and re-branding of the IAI training centres to the Singapore Cooperation Centres during Singapores ASEAN Chairmanship.

Addressing the opening ceremony, Singaporean ambassador to Việt Nam Catherine Wong said Today, the world is changing rapidly; development challenges and policy issues are becoming more complex.

Việt Nams rapid growth and development also means that the traditional courses that we ran are less relevant. We need to complement the classroom-based training with more modalities, including expert consultancy and hands-on projects.

We are committed to working with Việt Nam to develop its human resources. As a small island state with no natural resources, Singapore strongly believes that human resource development is key to a countrys sustainable development and progress, said the ambassador.

These enhanced Cooperation Centres in Cambodia, Laos, Myanmar and Việt Nam represent the next phase of Singapores contribution to the IAI agenda and underscore Singapores support for regional development and resilience, as well as our longstanding commitment to address the development needs of these countries and narrow the regional development gap.

Singapore and Việt Nam celebrated 45 years of bilateral relations and the 5th anniversary of the Strategic Partnership last year. A key aspect of the bilateral ties is the longstanding partnership in human resource development.

The revamped co-operation centre aims to facilitate a wider range of technical assistance projects for example, urban planning projects, education services, consultancy projects and services, volunteer work and humanitarian assistance.

Also it is expected to offer an integrated development assistance platform and partner with a greater variety of reputable private and public sector establishments from Singapore, such as Enterprise Singapore, Singapore International Foundation, Singapore Red Cross, Temasek Foundation and Lien AID.
