Demonstrators who have been protesting the rejection of the election bill since November 14 have gathered in front of the administration building of the government of Georgia in central Tbilisi earlier today, demanding snap parliamentary elections with the use of a fully proportional electoral system, conducted by an interim government.

Protests in Tbilisi were sparked after the ruling Georgian Dream party proposed election bill last week was scrapped, which offered a transition to a fully proportional electoral system starting 2020 instead of 2024.
