The Straits Times (4 June 2020)

More planes are set to take flight, with Singapore agreeing to resume essential business and official travel with China and exploring similar "fast lane" arrangements with a few other countries and regions.

New Zealand could be the next in line, The Straits Times understands, as Singapore gradually reopens its borders for Singaporeans and residents to do business overseas. The Republic will also allow foreigners to enter its borders safely, in limited numbers.

Yesterday, the authorities revealed plans to slowly ease travel restrictions. The Covid-19 outbreak has virtually paralysed international travel since earlier this year.
