US is 'not in search of conflict,' committed to 'results oriented' relationship with China, says Mark Esper

US Defense Secretary Mark Esper said Tuesday he hopes to visit China this year for talks on "crisis communications" and other mutual interests.

Speaking at a security seminar of International Institute for Strategic Studies, Esper said the visit aims to "enhance cooperation on areas of common interest, establish the systems necessary for crisis communications and reinforce our intentions to openly compete in the international system in which we all belong."
