A railway will be built between Iraq's Mosul and Turkey, according to the governor of Mosul on Sunday.

A team of engineers with the support of Turkish companies will start laying a new modern rail line between the two countries in the coming days, Najim al-Jubouri said in a statement to Al Sabaah, a semi-official Iraqi newspaper.

He said the rail line to be built from Mosul's center towards the Turkey border aimed to reduce the intensity at the land border crossing.
