More than 15,000 coronavirus patients in Japan are on waiting lists for a hospital or designated accommodation, a Kyodo News survey has found.

As the number of newly infected people has been rising sharply since November, more infected people have been forced to wait at home amid bed shortages.

The news agency surveyed 11 prefectures that are in the state of emergency since earlier this month. The situation is particularly tough in the capital Tokyo, which has the highest number of infected people - 7,539.
