Swedish police are investigating an axe attack that took place Wednesday in the southern town of Vetlanda as a possible "terror crime," authorities said.

Police said at least eight people were injured, but so far no fatalities have been reported.

Earlier, police said they shot and arrested a man in his 20s after he attacked several people in Vetlanda, a town of around 13,000 people about 190 kilometers (118 miles) southeast of Goteborg — Sweden's second largest city.
