
NORWAY ELECTION: VOTERS WEIGH FUTURE WITH LESS OIL WEALTH

- 13.09.2021

Deutsche Welle (12 September 2021)

Norwegians went to the polls on Sunday for the first of two days of voting in a parliamentary election that has put the future of the fossil fuel sector center stage.

The official election day is Monday, but voting booths were opened early in the capital Oslo and several other cities.

Opinion polls show the opposition Labor party on course to replace the Conservative-led coalition of Prime Minister Erna Solberg, though the center-left party would need support from at least two others to secure a majority.
