Would the last person to leave Croatia please turn the lights off!

Over two decades ago when I arrived here I remember doing some research about my new home, you know just to get a feel for the society I was becoming part of. One of the facts that stuck in my head was the population, or around 4.2 million.

A few months before emigrating to Dubrovnik I had been on a trip to Ireland. And my first impressions of Croatia were its similarity with the Emerald Isle, it just had the same feeling. Apart from the religious question, the friendliness of the people and the relaxed way of life, both of the countries populations were similar in size.
