Georgian President Salome Zurbishvili, who recently attended an event celebrating the 75th anniversary of UNESCO, has called on the organisation to establish an international Day of Caucasian Languages, which also would include Abkhaz.

We should save these languages as well as ban the hate speech, she addressed the international audience.

In her address, Salome Zurbishvili spoke about the grave humanitarian situation in the two Russian-occupied Georgian regions of Abkhazia and Tskhinvali (South Ossetia), which also affects the culture on the ground.
