When it comes to refugees, the European Unions treatment of those fleeing the war in Ukraine is the exception — to a dark and deadly rule.

The millions of Ukrainians who have sought refuge in the EU have received a very different welcome from those fleeing other conflicts, including the wars in Syria and Afghanistan, where some of the blocs countries have been directly involved.

Just as the full-scale Russian invasion of Ukraine upended EU policies on everything from NATO expansion to where the bloc sources its energy, the EUs approach to refugees was quickly revisited.
