PM financial advisor Mudhher Muhammad Salih, highlighted two important economic variables that Iraq is going through.

"The Iraqi economy has now entered a stage of adaptation, development, and release of its own potential and important latent preparations in a positive, promising and unprecedented manner after the dangerous stagnation phase that the country experienced in the year of the Corona pandemic 2020 and the past subsequent months," said Salih to the Iraqi News Agency - INA.

He explained that "Iraq is currently between two important variables, the first of which is the availability of an element of rapid adjustment within society to receive development programs and move towards productive investment as well as maintaining high growth in GDP, and the other is the availability of great capabilities in the oil energy sector, which needs an accelerated renewal of its investments and its operations in an integrated manner between the activities of extraction and the development of the marketing infrastructure,".
