Member of the European Parliament Marketa Gregorova on Monday said she was very happy that there was a plan and a will from the Georgian Government for fulfilling the 12-point conditions outlined by the European Union for granting the country the membership candidate status later this year.

Gregorova was commenting on the strategy presented on Friday by the ruling Georgian Dream party, and said she had considered this first step very positively, as the plan suggested inclusion of the domestic opposition and the civil society in the process.

Hopefully, [t]his will help to depolarise [the domestic political environment] to some extent. Of course, all the stakeholders, the government, the opposition and the civil society, need to work together. We might see some problems [in implementation] in the future. But I am very happy to see that theres a plan and theres a [political] will. We were waiting for this, the MEP said in an interview with Imedi TV.
