PKK terror groups presence is preventing the Ezidi community from returning to their homes in northern Iraqs Sinjar region, according to a senior official.

Hundreds of thousands of Ezidis, who had to flee their homes after the Daesh/ISIS terror group carried out an attack on the Sinjar district of Mosul on Aug. 3, 2014, have been living in the camps in northern Iraqs Kurdish Regional Government (KRG) under harsh conditions for eight years.

Speaking to Anadolu Agency, Dayan Jaafar, the provincial director of Duhok Center for Migration and Migrants and Combating Crisis, said no decision was taken regarding the closure of camps in Duhok.
