An aircraft carrier strike group from the United States will visit South Korea this week, according to the U.S. military, a significant show of strength amid concerns North Korea will soon conduct a nuclear test.

The USS Ronald Reagan carrier strike group will visit the southern South Korean port city of Busan, U.S. Naval Forces Korea said in a statement.

The strike group personnel will visit and engage with their South Korean navy partners and conduct a cultural exchange with the South Korean people, the statement said.
