Baghdad Operations Commander Lieutenant-General Ahmed Salim clarified on Friday, times of implementing security practices, and while confirming the continuation of lifting checkpoints, he indicated a number of reasons of traffic jams in the capital.

Salim told the Iraqi News Agency (INA), that "implementing security practices at peak times is incorrect," noting that "the Command always avoids implementing practices in the morning until the afternoon."

He added, "Sometimes there is a need to implement the security practice for information or other reasons, while avoiding it in the morning as much as possible."
