If Armenia considers it necessary to make decision on entire package of measures or on individual points, this can be implemented, says the former head of Russian-led bloc

The Collective Security Treaty Organization's (CSTO) proposals to send a mission to the Armenian-Azerbaijani border remain should Yerevan deem it necessary, the former head of the Russian-led bloc said on Monday.

"As for the direction of the CSTO mission - those proposals to provide assistance to the Republic of Armenia - one of the points was the direction of the CSTO mission to the Armenian-Azerbaijani border * This remains in force. If Armenia considers it necessary either to make a decision on the entire package of measures or on individual points, this can be implemented," Stanislav Zas said during a press conference.
