German Foreign Minister Annalena Baerbock is set to debut a feminist overhaul of the countrys diplomatic tactics on Wednesday, including creating a new role for an ambassador for feminist foreign policy.

The 80-page report on new guidelines □ titled Shaping Feminist Foreign Policy and seen in advance by POLITICO □ is a cornerstone of Baerbocks agenda and was included in the coalition agreement to form a government between her Green party, the business-friendly Free Democrats, and Chancellor Olaf Scholzs Social Democrats.

The report outlines 10 overarching guidelines, first reported by ThePioneer, including offering gender-sensitive humanitarian aid abroad; ensuring women and marginalized groups are involved in economic processes; and considering gender issues in climate and energy foreign policy.
