The EU is finalizing a 10 billion deal to jointly restock Ukraines dwindling ammunition supplies while refilling countries stocks, according to documents obtained by POLITICO.

The plan has two major elements.

First, the EU will spend 10 billion to partially reimburse countries that can immediately donate ammunition from their own stockpiles. Secondly, countries will work together to jointly purchase 10 billion in new ammunition the idea being that together they can negotiate bigger contracts at a lower price-per-shell.
