Kazakh Minister of Energy Almasadam Satkaliyev spoke out priority areas of cooperation with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) at the 67th IAEA General Conference on Sept. 25-29 in Vienna, Austria, reported the ministry's press service.

Satkaliyev emphasized that with the support of the IAEA, Kazakhstan has successfully established the production of radiopharmaceuticals and provided training for nuclear industry personnel.

The IAEA also conducts missions to provide expert assistance to Kazakhstan in formulating plans to construct nuclear power plants. One of these missions was held this March to assess the readiness of the country's nuclear energy infrastructure to decide on building a nuclear power plant.
