There already exists de facto peace between Azerbaijan and Armenia, but a formal treaty is needed to finalise the normalisation of bilateral ties, says Azerbaijani President Ilham Aliyev.

Azerbaijani President Ilham Aliyev said there already exists de facto peace between his country and Armenia, but a formal treaty is needed to finalise the normalisation of bilateral ties, his office has said in a statement.

But in order to bring this process to a logical end, a peace treaty must be signed and Armenia's territorial claims against Azerbaijan end, Aliyev told a meeting on Thursday with Secretary General of the Inter-Parliamentary Union Martin Chungong in Baku.
