To support returnees from Mosul, one of the most conflict-affected places, the United Nations Human Settlements Program (UN-Habitat) will resume work with the Japanese government to create peacebuilding initiatives and long-term solutions in northern Iraq.

The new project will be developed in Mosul, more precisely in the residential area that the city's master plan set aside for returnees, according to a statement released by UN-Habitat.

The development of social housing units with essential public infrastructure will be prioritized among the expected results.
