Prime Minister Nikol Pashinian defended his plans to try to enact a new Armenian constitution on Wednesday in the face of continuing opposition claims that he wants to make more concessions to Azerbaijan.

Pashinian denied any connection between the plans and a peace treaty currently discussed by Armenia and Azerbaijan.

There is an agreed article in the text of the peace treaty, which says that the parties cannot refer to their own laws to avoid fulfilling any obligations under this treaty. So the issue here is not about the peace treaty at all, he told opposition lawmakers during his governments question-and-answer session in the parliament.
