The European Union and Armenia have agreed to start working on an ambitious plan to deepen their relations, EU foreign policy chief Josep Borrell said on Tuesday.

Borrell made the announcement after chairing, together with Armenian Foreign Minister Ararat Mirzoyan, a regular session of the EU-Armenia Partnership Council in Brussels.

In October, your prime minister said in the European Parliament that Armenia is ready to move closer to the European Union, he told a joint news briefing with Mirzoyan. In response, the European Council, the highest political level of the EU, tasked me and the [European] Commission to explore ways to strengthen our relations in all dimensions. And in this context, today we decided to launch work on an ambitious new EU-Armenia partnership agenda.
