New survey data from five European countries carries worrying signal for centrist parties ahead of European Parliament vote.

France's far right is forecast to record its highest-ever result in the upcoming European Parliament election, new poll data shows.

The far-right National Rally, led by outgoing member of the European Parliament (MEP) Jordan Bardella, could win 33 percent of the vote, while the far-right Reconquête party would stand at 6 percent, according to a poll from consultancy firm Portland Communications shared with POLITICO.
