Minister of Energy of Kazakhstan Almasadam Satkaliyev spoke about the prospects of Kazakhstan purchasing electricity from Turkmenistan, centralasianlight.org reported.

"We will consider our needs and our repair schedule. We are generally ready to consider proposals from our Turkmen colleagues, both regarding gas and electricity, depending on the commercial attractiveness for our consumers," Satkaliyev noted at a briefing in the government, Sputnik reports.

The countries of Central Asia regularly consult on issues of mutual exchange and supply of energy resources, the minister continued. He added that Turkmenistan already exports electricity to Kyrgyzstan.
