Serbian President Aleksandar Vucic said Sunday that he had a phone conversation with Russian President Vladimir Putin for the first time in about two and a half years.

According to Vucic, the two leaders discussed bilateral relations, adding that he thanked Putin "for making sure that Serbia has enough gas this winter."

"Dear citizens of Serbia, I just finished a conversation with the President of Russia Vladimir Putin. We had not spoken for almost two and a half years. We had a good, open, long, and meaningful conversation," Vucic said in a post on Instagram.
