A poll by the Alpha Research agency, the results of which were released three days ahead of Bulgaria's October 27 early parliamentary elections, has found that seven – possibly eight – groups will get over the threshold to win seats in the 51st National Assembly.

Boiko Borissov's centre-right GERB-UDF coalition has the largest share of support among those who intend voting in Bulgaria's latest early parliamentary elections – the seventh time in three years that Bulgarians elect a legislature – at 26.5 per cent.

Vying for second place are the reformist We Continue the Change-Democratic Bulgaria (WCC-DB) coalition, 14.9 per cent, and pro-Kremlin party Vuzrazhdane, 14.2 per cent.
