Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan did not rule out the possibility of dropping lawsuits against Azerbaijan in international courts.

"Since there is no agreement yet, we are both making amendments. However, if we approach this issue from a principled perspective, and if we see that we are achieving real peace and reaching an agreement, I think that such a deal can be made," Pashinyan said in an interview with Armenian Public Television on Friday.

The deal, he said, is not to file lawsuits against each other for past events and to mutually waive any claims.
