Prime Minister Nikol Pashinian on Tuesday claimed to have successfully coped with grave security challenges facing Armenia, saying that he can now guarantee the countrys survival for the next century.

Opposition leaders shrugged off the claim made in the Armenian parliament amid the lingering risk of another war with Azerbaijan.

Two years ago, I announced from this podium that if we manage to maintain our statehood for a year or two, it will mean that we have created and are creating a real opportunity to have a state in the coming century, said Pashinian. And now, two years later, I ☀ must state that in the medium term, our strategic objective for the century has been achieved. But we must not let our guard down for a second.
