Europe is running out of time.

With Donald Trump poised to retake the White House in a few weeks and the continents economy in a deepening funk, the bedrock on which the regions prosperity rests isnt just developing fissures, its in danger of crumbling.

Europes economy has proved remarkably resilient in recent decades on the back of the blocs eastward expansion and strong demand for its wares from Asia and the United States. But as Chinas long-running boom winds down and trade tensions with Washington blur the transatlantic trade picture, the salad days are clearly over.
