Amid widespread fears of another war with Azerbaijan and Bakus demands for more Armenian concessions, Prime Minister Nikol Pashinian has claimed to have made Armenia much more secure in the past year.

In his New Years Eve address to the nation, Pashinian said that his country is entering 2025 in a significantly more peaceful, significantly more stable, significantly more secure environment, and significantly more independent, significantly more sovereign, significantly more confident than before.

The year 2024 has been the most peaceful and calm year for our country in the last twenty years, and this fact really needs to be analyzed deeply and seriously, he said, adding that his policies will keep Armenia on that trajectory.
