Europes future security is hanging by a thread. Yet, for many on the continent, the war in Ukraine seems remote. Indeed, walking through the streets of Brussels, one cant even sense theres a war going on.

But there is. Russias aggression has already lasted more than 1,000 days, and despite heavy losses in manpower and equipment, Moscow isnt relenting.

Indeed, even as the United States rushes in military supplies ahead of President-elect Donald Trumps inauguration, theres no denying that, at this stage, Ukraine is on the back foot. And though the assistance from President Joe Bidens administration has been marked by constant caution and delay, often resulting in too little, too late, the new administration could be even worse.
