The peace agenda, including negotiations on delimitation and related issues, remains a priority for Armenia, according to Secretary of the Armenian Security Council Armen Grigoryan, Azernews reports.

We have sent proposals to Azerbaijan [on the draft peace talks] and are waiting for Azerbaijan's reaction. The proposals cover two articles on which the parties have not yet reached a final agreement. We have spoken openly about these articles. I hope that we will find solutions, Grigoryan stated.

President Ilham Aliyev had previously highlighted these two articles when interviewed by the Director General of Rossiya Segodnya International News Agency, one involving a commitment to refrain from filing international lawsuits against each other and the other concerning the non-deployment of foreign representatives near Azerbaijan's borders. He emphasized that these issues are critical for finalizing the peace treaty.
