Georgian non-governmental organizations (NGOs), often funded by the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), have been and remain involved in attempts to destabilize the situation in the country.

As reported by Baku.ws citing TASS, this was announced to journalists by the Prime Minister of the republic, Irakli Kobakhidze.

"In Georgia, there are the wealthiest NGOs that were directly used for revolution in Georgia. This process continues today. This is a kind of continuation of the process that began earlier," said Kobakhidze.
