The vote will determine who leads Kosovos stalled normalisation talks with neighbouring Serbia.

Prime Minister Albin Kurti has declared victory in Kosovos parliamentary election, but the results mean he must now try to form a coalition government.

Preliminary results released late on Sunday showed the premiers leftist Vetevendosje party in first place with 41.99 percent. The vote was widely viewed as a referendum on Kurti, who has been at odds with his Western allies over relations with neighbouring Serbia.
