Following Sunday's parliamentary election, a coalition government will now have to be formed as Kosovo looks to normalise ties with Serbia while foreign funding remains in question.

Kosovo Prime Minister Albin Kurti's left-wing Self-Determination Movement party won the most seats in the country's parliamentary election. Short of a majority in the house, the party, known as Vetevendosje, will have to enter a coalition to form the next government.

Self-Determination Movement won roughly 41% of the vote, according to the Central Election Commission, the election governing body.
