Greek Foreign Minister Giorgos Gerapetritis has stated that the dialogue process between Greece and Türkiye over the past year and a half has led to progress in certain areas, including reduced tensions over airspace disputes, enhanced cooperation on migration, and increased trade volume.

Speaking to the Greek-American newspaper Ethnikos Kirikas ahead of his visit to New York for a United Nations Security Council meeting on Feb. 23, Gerapetritis highlighted key developments in relations between Athens and Ankara.

He emphasized the importance of maintaining diplomatic engagement despite existing disagreements.
