The European Union is considering allocating an additional 10 million euros ($10.5 million) in non-lethal military aid to Armenia through its European Peace Facility (EPF), a special fund aimed at strengthening the defense capacities of EU partners.

According to RFE/RL sources in Brussels, the EU's High Representative for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy Kaja Kallas has submitted such a proposal to the blocs decision-making Council. The proposal is expected to be discussed in the coming weeks, though a specific date has not yet been set. To be approved, it must receive unanimous support from all of the EU's 27 member states.

Armenia received first-ever EU military aid, also worth 10 million euros, last July. The money was due to be spent over the next two-and-a-half years on creating a field hospital and auxiliary facilities for a battalion-size Armenian army unit.
