Türkiye plans to finalize an agreement with Iraq very soon on the Development Road Project, a strategic infrastructure initiative aimed at strengthening regional connectivity, the country's transportation minister said Thursday.

Speaking at the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) Emerging Markets Forum in Istanbul, Transport and Infrastructure Minister Abdulkadir Uraloglu emphasized that transit routes and transport corridors are essential to global economic development. He said that every penny spent on transportation infrastructure will contribute to reducing trade costs, increasing economic growth, promoting regional integration and achieving sustainable development goals.
