With the United States throwing up the highest trade barriers in a century, Ursula von der Leyens European Commission is on a mission to do trade deals with everyone else.

Donald Trump is turning his back on free trade and, with it, the 11 trillion transatlantic trade relationship. That's motivating the European Union to do trade deals with just about everyone else.

The United States accounts for 13 percent of world trade. The EU, the worlds largest single market spanning 27 nations and 450 million people, accounts for around 16 percent and is looking to extend its lead.
