Ankara said it wont comply with a new EU bill to fully quit Moscows fuel, potentially creating a loophole for Russian gas to keep entering the bloc.

Turkey will not support the EUs plan to ditch Russian gas imports, threatening Brussels efforts to kick the blocs remaining reliance on Moscows energy.

Sitting at the EUs border, Turkey has long served as a conduit for Russian energy heading to Europe. But that connection is now under scrutiny after a recent EU proposal to eliminate all Russian gas imports by the end of 2027.
