Kazakhstan and Israel have signed a memorandum of understanding to enhance cooperation in water resource management on Nov. 11. The agreement was signed by Kazakh Minister of Water Resources and Irrigation Nurzhan Nurzhigitov and Israeli Minister of Regional Cooperation David Amsalem.

The memorandum outlines a framework for strengthening bilateral ties in water management, including the modernization of water infrastructure, efficient use of resources, implementation of water-saving technologies, and water reuse initiatives.

It also encourages knowledge sharing and collaboration in technological innovation, particularly in data collection, management, and processing through remote sensing, reported the Ministry of Water Resources and Irrigations press service.
